COKE DRINKERS "BOTTOMS UP" IN DRINKING COMPETITION

For once, Coca Cola drinkers had a tough time competing to drink their favourite drinks! Nevertheless, the Coke Drinking Competition held at Sunway Lagoon Club on 25 April 1999 recorded a good turnout from the Club members and their families.

Coke drinks for the day.

Sponsored by F&N Coca Cola (Malaysia) Sdn Bhd and Tanjung Golden Village, the event was great fun and entertainment for the parents and their children.

Participants were divided into three groups and for each group, parents and their kids had to finish two cups of Coke using straws. It was obvious that the kids found it easier than the adults to drink up. Three winners from each group made it to the final round.

To give the finals a more challenging twist, the rules were changed. Parents were blindfolded and gathered in a circle. At the sound of the whistle, they were off searching for a bottle of Coke which they had to finish with their children.

The event was won by Mr Wong Chew Eng and son Yee Wen. Second place went to Mr Goh Soon Eng and daughter Daphne while third was Mr Jason Lee and son Melvyn.

Malaysian Students Start "YoYo"

Four pioneer students of Monash University, Malaysia, established an electronic communication network using high capacity hardware, a general access UNIX server and a communication connection, provided by the University.

The server, named "YoYo", is modeled after a similar system used by students in Monash, Australia. It is developed and maintained by the four pioneer students - Adrian Lo, Derrick Tan, Wong Kok Leong and Myles Milston, who later formed the Monash UNIX Group. The purpose, to provide students with their own avenue for general internet services from e-mail and storage space on the server to tutorials on computer related topics and relay chats.

According to Professor Robin Pollard, Head of School of Business and Information Technology, there was no formal instruction for the project. "Enthusiasm combined with knowledge gained in first-year computer science subjects were enough to get started. This is consistent with our philosophy of providing education that enables one to learn by oneself," he said.

Monash Students Set Up Council

A temporary student council has been established to represent the voices of the student community in Monash University, Malaysia. Called the Pro-Temp Council, the body was established with 20 pioneer students.

The establishment of this council shows that Monash students are interested in forging their own identity. They are willing to take the opportunity to establish a democratic constitution for the student organisation that will eventually become part of the Monash University Federation of Student Organizations (MUFSSO).

Pro Vice-Chancellor, Professor James Warren said that MUFSSO is a body that connects all student organisations on each of the Monash campuses and through this council, the University expects its students to share the learning experience of Monash University in Malaysia.

The Pro-Temp Council is organising activities for the students to encourage inter-faculty interaction that will enhance the collegiate environment at the University. At the same time, they are also organising an election campaign for the first official student council of Monash University, Malaysia.

Students from different degree programs, namely Bachelors of Business and Commerce, Computer Science, Engineering, Science (Biotechnology), Science (Environmental Management), Business and Information Technology and Communication, were invited to participate.

Response from the students was very good with more than 70 students signing up, forming six teams to compete in the tournament. Each team played 3 men singles, 2 men doubles, 1 women doubles and 1 mix doubles.

The tournament opened doors for more inter-faculty interaction, encouraging much camaraderie amongst students from different fields of studies.

One of the team captains, Ong Choong Leo, said the players were most competitive. "We have a lot of good players amongst our peers and it felt really good to be able to compete and at the same time make new friends on the court," he said.

There are plans to turn the Inter-Faculty Badminton Tournament into an annual event, to make it bigger and better.

To know your maths very well can be really rewarding. It really pays off to Leong Kam Seng, a 38-year-old managing director of a local computer software firm, the grand prize winner in the 'Count the Coca-Cola Cans' contest.

He calculated the volume of the giant plastic bin and divided it by the volume of a can. The figure minus 10 percent of air gave him the number 2,326. He miscalculated by one can (actual number is 2,325) but walked away with a Proton Satria 1.3GL worth RM36,000.

The contest was one of the events jointly organised by Sunway Lagoon and F&N Coca-Cola. There were also 100 consolation prize winners who received the Sunway Lagoon Extra Fun Club membership.
